From the Director's Desk

Generally this space is devoted to announcement of new programs and reports of other changes at KSOR. This month, however, finds few new entries in our program schedule and I have an opportunity to digress a bit.

Many organizations go through endless soul-searching over goals. And since we published something of that nature when we went high-power in February, I don't want to suggest that all we intend to do is publish our credo monthly. However, I happened to recall an anecdote that focuses upon much of the rationale for public broadcasting and I thought I'd share it with you.

Some years ago while teaching at another college I invited a friend to lecture to one of my classes. The gentleman was then an executive with a radio-television station but had worked earlier as an announcer, actor, producer and director at both the network and local levels in radio's earlier days. He was also a very well-known and influential figure in industry circles. Thus, he was well-equipped to discuss broadcasting of the past and present.

He did so. And that prompted one student to ask him to identify the greatest change he had noticed during the course of radio's growth. His answer has stuck with me ever since. Recalling radio's youth he commented that at the end of each day, then, a broadcaster would ask himself what ~~or~~ little thing his station had done to leave its audience better than they had been. The biggest difference in radio today, he said, was not the answer to that question but the fact that that question was never even asked.

In public broadcasting we still ask that question. We have our faults, no doubt, and there are surely times that you must wish that you were programming your own station because you're certain you could improve upon something. But there is still a life-force in public broadcasting which has not been eroded by growth and institutionalization. There is still the tingle of excitement on this side of the microphone at most public stations.

My friend, I think, meant to suggest that it was that tingle which he sensed had gone out of the commercial media. It seems to me that it is almost the most important thing a communications medium can possess. And at least at this station we work to keep it a part of our lives.

Please give our vote to more jazz, progressive rock, blue grass, mystery theatre and better coverage of major news events such as "fireside chats," presidential speeches, etc.

T. & J. Graham

Keep the classical music programming at its current level (or MORE!)

R. Frey

We are so pleased with your programming! I think some articles in the Tribune's "Tempo" section on specific programs would pick up listeners and, therefore, support.

E. Ousterhout

I was sorry to learn that United Airlines had found it necessary to cancel the grant for the Chicago Symphony next season. United does a lot of advertising in the Metropolitan areas, using radio, but it seems to me this would cover a great many less populous areas that would not have exposure otherwise. At any rate there is no harm in asking for reconsideration!

M.W. Williams

I pray that lots of "little people" will be able to contribute. Maybe I can't pay a lot for what I hear, but there is no reason why I can't pray a lot! I wish . . . to keep classical music within reach of my listening ear.

The works of Claude Debussy, born August 22, 1862; foremost of the impressionist composers. His music has strong powers of suggestion and is characterized by lush imagery and rich orchestration. Orchestral works such as "La Mer" have become famous. His lesser known pieces such as the string quartet, cello conata, preludes and selections from his only opera, "Pelleas and Melisande," will be featured during the month.

Conductor-composer, Leonard Bernstein, born August 25, 1918, who rose to prominence as youthful conductor of the New York Philharmonic and has since established a solid reputation as contemporary composer of the first order. His symphonies, ballets and tone poems will be featured on First Concert along with the leading orchestras of the world performing with the leading orchestras of the world performing with Bernstein on the podium.

RETROSPECTIVE

8-5 FOUR "PICTURES" and SIX "FIFTHS"

Having already spoken of the work the Chicago Symphony has recorded most (Richard Strauss' "Also sprach Zarathustra," five times) on our first broadcast, we turn to other works the Orchestra has recorded more than once: Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," for example, recorded no less than four times by the CSO, and the Beethoven and Tchaikovsky Fifth Symphonies, three each. There are more, and we'll play side-by-side comparisons of them.

8-12 JEAN MARTINON IN CHICAGO

The late French conductor was Music Director of the Chicago Symphony for five years, 1963 to 1968. He was particularly impressive in 20th Century music, and being a composer himself gave him a special enthusiasm for, and grasp of, music of our time. But there is a spectacular Ravel "Bolero" and Bizet "Farandole," too . . . Today's program will be an overview of Martinon's Chicago years and the recordings he made with the CSO.

8-19 POP CONCERT

All of the "Big Five" American orchestras have recorded popular concert material as well as more "serious" music. The Chicago Symphony, in its earlier recording years, did more pop material in relation to its heavier record activity, but there are representative pieces from the later years too, including a remarkable "1812" Overture, three "Bartered Bride" overtures, and two "Scheherazades.

8-26 THE CSO AS ACCOMPANIST

Major symphony orchestras are the accompanying bodies for most of the great solo artists, and the Chicago Symphony has names such as Schnabel, Heifetz, Richter, Rubinstein, Cliburn, and many others among its list of collaborative recording partners. There are also vocal records, including a quite beautiful Leontyne Price LP, and the CSO's first complete opera recording, Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman," recently released.

AFTER

STAR

In October, 1974 a Southern California film crew shot a Buick commercial in central Oregon, from Klamath Falls to Crater Lake. Cinematographers were Haskell Wexler and Conrad Hall, both Academy Award winners. The company was Wexler's Dove Films.

Covering the filming for the Medford Mail Tribune I attended dinner with the film company at the Diamond Lake Resort. There were about 15 of us around the long table. I sat on Wexler's right.

At the time he was signed to be cinematographer on "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," due to begin in Salem Jan. 5, 1975. He began that picture but did not finish it. He had also been visual consultant on "American Graffiti," directed by a young man named George Lucas who had gone to Universal from Francis Ford Coppola's American Zoetrope Co. in San Francisco. For American Zoetrope Lucas had previously done a 1984 type science fiction picture, "THX 1138."

Over dinner I asked Wexler if Lucas was then at Universal working on "The Radioland Murders," which had been announced in some motion picture trade papers. Wexler answered that Lucas had shelved that to work on a new film, "Star Ward," released by 20th Century Fox.

WARS

by Al Reiss

Now "Star Wars" is current history. The picture turned its interplanetary lasers on box office records and Bruce, the rubber shark from "Jaws" was blasted out of the water.

So now we stand to be inundated with a new wave of science fiction films. Lucas reportedly has two sequels to "Star Wars" ready to go. His present schedule of three is a cutdown from an originally projected total of five. That, in itself, is telling.

As most who have seen "Star Wars" have noticed, it is not a science fiction movie. It is good fun, high quality fantasy. Most of all it is entertainment. It is basically the good guys (our team) against the bad guys (their team). "Star Wars" is nearer "Rocky" than it is to "THX 1138."

Late last year "Rocky" entered the race in the home stretch and finished first in the Oscae Derby, receiving the Academy Award as the "best" picture of 1976. One of the other contenders was a film released early in the year, "All the President's Men," a factual detective story about the two Washington Post reporters who connected the Watergate break-in to the White House of the Nixon administration.

In about the same time frame, between the beginning of the filming of "All the President's Men" and the release of "Rocky," Jimmy Who became President Jinny Carter, riding in from Georgia on a white dark horse to upset the Washington establishment. Carter was elected as much for what he was not as for what he was, which comparatively few people knew anyway. He represented an escape from the Nixon-Johnson years; someone who had no connection with Vietnam or Watergate.

"The Exorcist," the 1973 shocker that started the devil cycle in current films, equated the demonic possession of a young girl with the illness of society. (In 1968 "Rosemary's Baby" insinuated the equation but did not capture the national imagination.)

In 1975 "Jaws" depicted the victory of two men over an embodiment of sub-aquatic (subconscious) angst. A third, for whom the dark force was an obsession, was devoured by it.

Allowing that movie trends are cyclic, "Star Wars" finds the pointer newly entering an old notch on the wheel: entertainment. The existentialist, the anti-hero, the thinly disguised CIA assassination plot will be replaced for awhile by the heroic success story, factual or fantastic. Modern mass entertainment is a circular causation, shaped by the environment it helps create. The election of Jimmy Why is "Rocky" getting an improbable shot at the title (and Sylvester Stallone prevailing to star in the movie he wrote). It is Luke Skywalker and Princess Leia Organa and Han Solo annihilating the dark forces of the Galactic Empire.

But the evil knight, Darth Vader escaped. He is waiting out there, somewhere among the stars.

Still, waiting for him, are Luke Skywalker, Princess Leia, Han Solo and the future.
